Audio summaries turn your sources into a conversation you can listen to while you review. But audio is a first reading, not verified truth. This guide shows you how to use it well and how to organize documents so that everything you hear can always be checked.

voices in an Audio Overview	steps to prepare the sources	rule: listen, then verify

01 What an Audio Overview is

It is a spoken summary of your sources, presented as a conversation between two voices who discuss the main ideas. It helps you grasp the overall picture in a few minutes.

WHEN TO USE IT

To review on the move, to get a first idea of a long document, or to explain a topic to someone without reading the material aloud.

02 Prepare the sources before generating audio

1. Select: only sources on the same topic and period. Mixed audio is confusing.
2. Name: use titles that say what each document is and what year it is from.
3. Check: make sure the text reads properly (a scanned PDF without text is useless).

03 Listen and verify

1. Listen to the full audio once, without pausing.
2. Write down three ideas in your own words.
3. Open the citations for the ideas you care about and compare with the original.

4 If the audio says something you cannot find in the source, do not use it.

KEY LIMIT

A summary loses nuance: conditions, exceptions and exact figures. For decisions, always go back to the document.

04 Document management: order and privacy

Practice	Why it matters
One notebook per topic or project	Avoids mixing sources that should not be answered together
Versions with dates in the name	You know which document you used and when
Remove personal data before uploading	Documents often carry hidden names, ID numbers or phone numbers
Check who can access the notebook	Sharing a notebook also shares its sources

- [ ] I confirmed the sources are on the same topic and period.
- [ ] I removed personal data before uploading documents.
- [ ] I checked the audio ideas against the citations.

TO WRAP UP

- [ ] I listen to the audio and then verify against the citations.
- [ ] I organize one notebook per topic with clear dates.
- [ ] I protect personal data before uploading documents.
